Digital Keynote by Prof. Dr. Miriam Rehm

Distributive Justice in Times of Corona?

Followed by: Digital Future Slam & Workshops

Corona crisis, economic crisis, racial inequalities crisis, care-work crisis, migration crisis, poverty crisis, education crisis and climate crisis - the crises of our time seem to have no end. They rather represent the normal state of affairs in the 21st century. This permanent state of crisis forms the reality of life for the current generation of pupils and students. In these times, it is not only in a crisis-ridden everyday life that we have to learn, teach and do research, as the Corona crisis has made particularly clear. It is also necessary to learn from these crises and to actually follow the paths to overcoming them. Therefore, teaching and learning in a crisis must always be learning from the crisis in order to design and shape paths into a future of a good life for all.

The ASEER Forum 2021 invites members of all generations from institutionalized education and research contexts, from social movements as well as the interested public to discuss the educational and research mission of a crisis-conscious and transformative socioeconomic education and research. What educational content and forms does such socioeconomic education and research need? What are appropriate qualifications and competences? Which research profiles, methods and funding make socioeconomic research crisis-conscious and effective for ways of overcoming the crises? In addition to this education program of the future, the focus will be on the exchange of experience with tried and tested forms of sustainable socioeconomic education in schools, universities and in projects outside the established institutions, on innovative research projects that have already been carried out and on experience in the concrete reorganization of educational institutions and political frameworks.
